BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

James McMullan was born in Tsingtao, China in 1934 and spent his childhood moving between North America and Asia. He left China in 1941 moved to Canada with his mother while his father joined the British Army. He enrolled in boarding school in India in 1944 and later moved to Shanghai following his father's death in a plane crash. He returned to Canada with his mother and finally emigrated to the United States at age seventeen. He spent one year at the Cornish School of Allied Arts in Seattle and then volunteered for the U.S. Army draft. McMullan was placed at the Psychological Warfare Center at Fort Bragg, North Carolina where he illustrated diagrams of where to place propaganda loudspeakers on Sherman tanks.

In 1955, McMullan moved to New York City to continue his art education at Pratt Institute. As a student, he supported himself by illustrating book jackets, which he continued after graduation. He joined Push Pin Studios in 1966, where he sharpened his psychologically intense style of realism. He departed Push Pin in 1969 just as Milton Glaser and Clay Felker were starting New York magazine and he was a member of the core group of artists who helped establish that magazine's graphic style; his illustrations for the New York magazine article on a Brooklyn discotheque became the basis for the film Saturday Night Fever.

McMullan designed his first Broadway poster, Comedians, in 1976, which led to a long relationship with Lincoln Center and his creation of many evocative and highly expressive posters for the theater. McMullan married children's book writer Kate Hall in 1979, and together they have collaborated on six children's books.

He began teaching at the School of Visual Arts in 1969 and published Revealing Illustrations in 1981. In 1987 he inaugurated his High-Focus Drawing Program at SVA, which later resulted in a book on his distinctive approach to life drawing. McMullan's work was featured in a retrospective exhibition at the Visual Arts Museum at the School of Visual Arts in 1979 and his theater posters were the subject of an exhibition at the Society of Illustrators in New York in 1999.
